REASONS FOR ALLOWANCE

1. Windows NT teaches the retrieval of an image, thereby enabling a user to ascertain certain file characteristics, such as graphics, color, font, etc., by looking at the image using quickview, and properties window (fig.2-3, and 6-7). PhotoImpact teaches an application program for displaying file characteristics, and a thumbnail of the file, before a full version of the file is opened (p.1). Neither Windows NT, nor PhotoImpact teaches the extension enabling display of a recitation of indicia of internal file characteristics separate from the image and the file image of the desired file by opening the desired file in a manner free of opening an application program in working memory and hence external to application programs in the working memory, and in a manner free of decoding the indicia of internal file characteristics from a filename of the desired file (claim 1, lines 8-13). It would not have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art to combine Windows NT, and PhotoImpact to retrieve internal file characteristics outside of opening an application program, and separate from an image, and filename using Windows explorer features. Therefore, it is concluded that neither Windows NT, nor PhotoImpact teaches or suggests the features of claim 1 as a whole, which are also found in independent claims 7, and 12.
